SIGN OF THE STREET CLOCK. THE DAILY NEWS.

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 28, 1878.

The Indianapolis News has the largest circulation of any daily paper in Indiana.

GREENBACK papers have a very ephemeral existence. About forty have been started in the west with a sudden wide circulation on account of gratuitous distribution and have then collapsed, the strain being too great on the deluded victims who footed the bills. Such fate awaits them all.

THE Knights of Pythias have made a matchless success of their meeting. The turn-out vesterday was a surprise in its numbers and appointments. The city bedecked itself in honor of the time, perfect weather contributed its share, and altogether the Supreme lodge of the world has had a cordial greeting.

SECRETARY SHERMAN'S speech at Toledo was a masterly one. There is no escape from the logical justification of resumption which it gave. The cold facts he presented should be useful in allaying the fever of apprehension the democrats and nationals profess to have concerning what will take place on January 1, 1879.

BEN. BUTLER has definitely decided to be a candidate for governor of Massachusetts. His self-written petition has been returned with about 40,000 names to it, and his letter of acceptance may be expected at any time. It to be hoped that Massachusetts will so effectually kill this political Ishmaelite that in future he will cease from troubling.

* THE St. Louis Globe-Democrat is starting a campaign against titles. It proposes to tax every general, colonel and the like such a sum as shall work the abolition of the "handle." Of course the Globe excepts General Grant. In fact this may be only a covert plan of that paper to further Grant's campaign, by exalting him to the dignity of the only titled personage in the realm. At any rate the logical outcome of the Grant movement is INDIANAPOLIS sends not only money but men to the feaer-stricken south. Several doctors and nurses have gone to the relief of the worn-out attendants. This is a contribution that any city could be proud of. As to money, much has been given, but much is needed. There are many, perhaps, who have not contributed yet, and many who could give more. The fever has not reached its height, judging by the daily reports of increasing virulence, and aid is still asked for.

THE Springfield Republican pertinently

Poor Congressman Foster insists upon reminding the public how great a fool a clever man may sometimes fall into being. He has made another speech out in Ohio pitching into the president, another speech of the president of the p into the president's southern policy as a fail-

Such an assertion in regard to the southern policy is about on a par with that which relegates the financial question to third or fourth place by calling its in the words of Mr. Watterson, "a nasty little wrangle."

Some of the objections to the sufficiency of the fire protection, indicated by the recent tests of the water works, strike us as being a little captious. If a stream is not forced two hundred or one hundred feet high at some remote point, what of it, if there is no work to do at such a hight? A forty foot stream is enough if there is no building higher than two stories to complaining that a stream is not strong enough to reach the court house steeple if there is no steeple where the stream is needed? It is enough to say to objections that a stream won't over the Bates house, or the Vance block, as the boys say, "it don't have to." If it is strong enough for the buildings in its vicinity, it furnishes all the protection possible. A barrel of powder won't kill a man any deader than thimblefull if it is used right, and monstrous fire streams would only be a waste of power in sections of the city that contained no buildings that required such force. If the streams are high enough for big buildings where there are big buildings, why is that not enough? By the time big buildings become frequent in remote quarters of the city there will be big mains laid and big streams as easy to raise there as in the center.

VOORHEES labors heavily. The serflike submission which it was assumed existed in his party when he was put forward as the one issue of the campaign is not so wide spread or servile as the managers calculated. It is one thing to make a canvass for party success, and be acknowledged as the foremost candidate for the honors which that success can give, and entirely another thing to make a canvass as the one person for whose sole behoof work shall be done. Freemen, of whatever party, do not like to be collared and ticketed, "This is my dog, D. W. Voorhees," and be told to "leg" for their master, with the injunction that on election day they will be led to the polls to vote for him. The attempt to substitute "Voorheesism" for "democracy" in Indiana is not producing the harmonious effects the managers thought it would when they made the mistake of assuming that Voorhees's personality was greater than all principle, The Indiana democracy have measures in view as well as men, and there are evidences that they resent being bound and gagged and delivered over to no other alternative than serving Voorhees They don't do a great deal of thinking, but they do some, and the incontestable evidence of Voorhees's record, which shows him chief among salary grabbers and southern sympathizers, the sure friend of monopolists and corporations, voting always on the side of the rich, is awakening in the party the feeling that there may be better men in it than D. W. Voorhees, and that personal fealty to him is not a test of democracy.

CURRENT COMMENT.

Commenting on the testimony of Professor Sumner before the Hewitt committee that there was no legislative cure for the ills of the country; that only hard work, frugality and honesty would bring us through the crisis, the New York World says: "His philosophy is that of the democratic party.' The World is a droll paper; this is one of its best jokes.

The Philadelphia Press notes the fact that in that latitude the spell of regular nominawell as any of us that the one thing New York senatorial candidates won't do is to define themselves. "How not to do it" is the motto of modern statesmanship.

A republican county convention met at Jefferson City, Missouri last week and adopted a resolution:

That we favor the nomination of U.S. Grant in 1880 for president of the United States, and pledge him our hearty support if nominated.

This, we believe, is the first of its kind so far. The Illinois convention a long time ago did the same thing virtually, but not official ly. There is plenty of time yet. But people who wish to avoid making a decision whether they favor Grant for a third term by de claring that the talk amounts to nothing, might profitably make up their minds on the subject. As far as 'the managers are concerned this attempt is a desperate fight.

The perversity of bad copy made The News give a wrong impression concerning Hon. Charles Foster, of Ohio. He declined a renomination tendered him by a new district, made up of part of his old one, by the democratic gerrymander. He is running as a candidate in his old district.

At his Toledo speech Secretary Sherman was asked three questions.

First-What is the matter with the trade dollar? Second—The government received dollar for dollar when she put the trade dollar out. Third—Did the person, on receiving the trade dollar from the government, do so with the understanding that he had to take it to China to spend it? If anybody is to blame, who is it?

To these he replied: First, that the trade dollar was not a legal tender, but is worth ninety cents as bullion. The standard dollar is a legal tender, and, therefore, worth par. That is the difference. Second, the government did not receive dollar for dollar for the trade dollar, but received one and a half cent for coining each dollar for private bullion owners; that was all it was to the miller who ground the grist for a small percentage. Third, the bullion owner did receive the trade dollar for exportation to China, a de vice made to give him a market for his bullion, and upon the fall of silver it was perverted by him as a means of cheating our

The Scene of the Plague.

The depot of the Howards is at No. 265 Main street. A railing blocks out all but visitors on business of life or death. These visitors on business of life or death. These walk up to the second railing, where their wants are heard and promptly attended to. Between these two railings, on benches placed along the walls, sit the nurses waiting to be called. Now one is beckoned and hastens to the counters. Ex-Mayor John Johnson pins a yellow badge on him, and says: "Go with this gentleman to Market street, You know your business; you know our rules; Major Edmondsun will visit you in an hour. Now you, sir." And the next applicant comes up for a nurse for ice, for mustard, or for stimulants, or for disinfectants. Behind the railing Secretary Smith is at his desk, and the other yellow-badged gentlemen are doing up medicine, disinfectgentlemen are doing up medicine, disinfectants or stimulants, in parcels ready for distribution. Men dying and begging piteously for food—a single mouthful of which administered to them would prove fatal—were seen on all sides. Both operators pronounced it the most horrible spectacle they had ever gazed upon. On one side were two coffins containing the black-yellow remains of two of the latest victims, while another square box was receiving a mass of putrified flesh that a few hours before was known as one of God's noblest creatures. At the Chamberlain house one of the most popular hotels in the city, another sad scene was exhibited. The voices another sad scene was exhibited. The voices of twelve sick and dying patients filled the air with groans and piteous appeals to God and man to have mercy upon them. At the Waltham house a similar scene was presented. The Confederate "Fiat Money."

Brooklyn Union-Argus.] The paper money issued by the confederates was "fiat money." It was currency only redeemable six months after the indeonly redeemable six months after the inde-pendence of the confederacy should be recognized by the United States government. It was unredeemed during the existence of the confederacy, and rested for all the value it had upon the "fiat" of the confederate government. There was no gold or silver in quantities sufficient to supply the demands of trade, and that money was issued for that purpose. It was issued just as it was needed, and was in all respects a perfect symbol of purpose. It was issued just as it was needed, and was in all respects a perfect symbol of the "absolute" money the agitators are now crying for. Never did money depreciate more rapidly. In January, 1862, it took $120 to buy one hundred in gold. In August it took $200. On the first of January, 1863, it took $310. A year later $1,800. One year later still $5,400. On the 15th of April, 1865, the cost of $100 gold was $5,500, and after that date as many millions would not have purchased a golden eagle. What did this mean to the possessor of this "fiat money?" To the laborer, the tradesman, the farmer, the soldier, or the capitalists? It meant that when this "fiat money" was held at $1,000 for $100 in specie, that a $10 pair of boots cost $100, a 50 cent pound of tea $5. When the value was at $2,000 or $3,000 for $100 in gold the boots cost $200 or $300, the in that latitude the spell of regular nominations is broken; that voters consult the general interests rather than those of the party, The same answers for the country generally. Party lines never lay so loose as now.

The New York Herald wants a grand discussion among the senatorial candidates of that state, that the people may know their doctrines and designs and what they would do in the way of legislation should they be elected. The Herald says it is in earnest, but it will strike most people as being only sarcastical. As if the Herald did not know as well as a reactive of the strict of the strict of the strict of the strict of the nationals. It was a full legal tender. It was precisely what fiat money now would be taken for $5, but it would only buy an article that was worth 50 cents in gold or in redeemable trudy. $100 in gold the boots cost $200 or $300, the

Teach the Girls Trades.

Assuming then that it should become a part of every girl's education to learn some trade by which in an emergency she could support herself, and perhaps others dependent on her, let us run over some of the arts adapted to her physical capacities. Sewing, dress making and millinery she is supposed to know something about, but too often nowadays that something is a very trifling quantity. Teaching requires long preparation and considerable natural adaptation. Cooking, as we have before suggested is an art greatly neglected in this country and art greatly neglected in this country and one which would seem to promise well to those who should make themselves experts in it. Telegraphy is easily learned; so is type setting, and both are permanent busi-nesses, always furnishing a large amount of employment. Painting on china, engraving and carving in wood are all occurations in and carving in wood are all occupations in which women would be likely to excel and n which fair remuneration could be earned. Bookkeeping too is a profession easily learned and for proficients in which there is always a demand. Now we purpose here simply throwing out the hint that as a rule our daughters be taught some such trade and be thus thoroughly qualified to meet misfortune should they ever be overtaken by it.

Life is a rose, brier-burdened, yet sweet, Bloeming a day: Flinging its perfume like perfume to meet, Wind-blown away!

Leaf after leaf spreads its blush to the air, Kissed by the sun: Deeper-bued, growing, as joy makes it fair. Love's guerdon won.

Leaf after leaf shrivels up from the heart, Leaving it bare: Color and fragrance and joy all depart, None left to care.

Nay, the divine in it lingers there still, God's care in all; Rose-leaves but drop at the beck of His will, Fetters which thrall.

Up from its trammels the freed spirit wings, Higher to soar; Attar immortal a pure essence flings, Sweet, evermore!

After Saturday next, by virtue of the action of the last congress, the existing bank-rupt law will be repealed. It will cause a deal of trouble, after all, to business men, because it will subject them to the annoyance of trading under the widely varying usages of the different states. The actor Montague, according to a correspondent of the Boston Herald, was a wonderful favorite with New York women, and well worth $250 a week as an attraction for Wallack's theater. Indeed, he was not inclined to dissipation of the ruder sorts. He was too nice for that, if not too sensible. He had few associates among actors. There is no exaggeration about the stories of the great number of letters received by Montague from women and girls who were strangers to him. The writers were in many cases married women, and might have been seriously compromised had he been as indiscreet as they. As a rule he burned these missives, but not always; yet he kept himself tolerably free from promiscuous intrigues. missives, but not always; yet he kept himself tolerably free from promiscuous intrigues. The general adulation of the fair ones seemed to satisfy him. How intense was that adulation was indicated by the extensive sale of his photographs. They were displayed in the fancy goods stores, where women congregated. In one play he wore his hair in a flat curl at each side of his forchead, like the spitcurls of childhood, and from that came the imitative fashion and from that came the imitative fashion among women of a row of just such curls. However, within two months before his death he was willing to take advantage of his special popularity among women. He arranged for a benefit performance at Booth's theater, and, a week beforehand, advertised that tickets could be bought at his private residence, the street and number being given. The idea proved a hit. To buy tickets of Montague personally, was a boon indeed. Perhaps, in the interchange of tickets and maney, the purchaser's hand might touch his. A bit of conversation with him was not improbable, even. Officer Boyce, after feeling carefully, saw that the stairs would bear his weight. He groped his way up, followed by Barry. At the top they saw that the door of the bedroom was open, and that the room was filled with flames. There they saw another man in the middle of the room. Barry grossed the threshold and recognized the man in the middle of the room. Barry crossed the threshold and recognized the man as Anthony Boem, a young barber who had lately moved to Astoria. Barry shouted to Boem to come out, and to follow him down stairs. He was answered by a chattering laugh. Boem did not move. Then Barry went into the room and seized Boem, and tried to drag him out. Boem fought like a wild beast, and the fire was burning brighter and the smoke in the room getting thicker and the smoke in the room getting thicker all the time. The laugh that he heard in the room Barry recognized as that of a maniac. He could not see Boem's face because of the smoke, but he knew that the barber had los his reason. His charred remains were found in the ruins.

CIVIL SERVICE.

How it Works Across the Water Senator Blaine's "Cousin" vs. Facts.

[Springfield Republican.]
What Gail Hamilton has to say of Dormal B. Eaton and other victims of her politica writings is of little account to the public, but she has recently made an absurd and baseless assault on the argument for the reform of the civil service from the example of England. She has taken upon, herself to "expose" the "pretense" that partisan patronage has been to a large extent abolished in England, and declares that the civil service system of Eng-land "licenses" feavoritism instead of reverland "licenses" favoritism instead of repu hending it. The trouble with Miss Dodge is that her investigations into the civil service do not come down to a sufficiently recent period. Formerly, it was true that candidates for examination for offices that candidates for examination for offices in the gift of the English government had to be recommended by some one of the party in power, the more prominent the better. This was what Miss Dodge calls licensing party patronage. But in 1870 the government issued an order which materially changed the situation by throwing open competitions for offices to all native-born subjects of her majesty of sound health and good moral character. The candidate for office needs no recommend from a member of Parliament or anybody else, and the washerwoman's some any body else, and the washerwoman's son stands on the same plane with the duke's. The applicants pays a certain entrance fee, from $5 to 20, according to the value of the office to which he wishes to be appointed. One who has been through some of these examinations write: aminations writes:—
'The examination is not such that any one

"The examination is not such that any one can pass it. It is the severest test of scholarship and working ability that can possibly be applied. Those who prove themselves the best at these examinations get the positions in every case. There is no mistake about that. I attended two civil service examinations, one in Edinburg and one in Belfast. And I know that many candidates who would never have got a position under the state of things that existed before this order was passed are now in government employ." passed are now in government employ."

These are tee terms which control admission to all departments of the British government, except the diplomatic and horse guards, or war department.

Across the channel is another great and eminently practical nation, the French, whose civil service is debased to party purposes to a much preater degree than our own, yet who are making some endeavor to rectify the evil. The radical difficulty with France is that local self-government is very poorly developed and that the central government is responsible for vast numbers of functionaries who in this country would belong to the states. Yet France understands the value of a consular and diplomatic service of ricked a consular and diplomatic service of picked and trained men. We have before us the decree of February 1, 1877, by which the minister of foreign affairs seeks to secure such. A young man who seeks an office in the consular or diplomatic service of France must present the "diplomatic service of France must present the "diplomatic service". Frence must present the "diploma of licentiate either in law or sciences," (equivalent to a graduation from our law or scientific schools) and have a knowledge of two for-eign languages. With these qualifications eign languages. With these qualifications he is admitted to the class of supernumerary attaches, where he serves two years without pay, one year being abroad. At the end of that time he becomes eligible to a position in the third class of diplomatic secretaries and consular pupils, after "a certificate of apti-tude from a special jury." In this grade he receives a salary of $1,000, and is entitled thenceforth to promotion, as the service ad-mits of. Quite a contrast, this, to the Amer-ican practice of appointing editorial friends, broken-down congressmen, and political Workers.

We cite the French system not because it is We cite the French system not because it is precisely adapted to the wants of this country, but to show that the principles of civil service reform as proposed for this country are by no means "all humbug," but have received the sanction of the most highly organized governments of the world. That American politicians should selfishly cling to the present system, and even that the female members of their families should think senators and congressmen the fit dispensers of the patronage of the country, is not, perhaps, to be wondered at. But when we are told not only that this system results in no evil to this country, but is accepted, licensed, and welcomed as a sweet boon abroad, it is time to look around and see what is being done to curb the natural greed and selfishness of people in power. The Jacksonian principle that to the victors belong the spoils can not be softened into a tolerable principle of government. It was recognized upon its very not be softened into a tolerable principle of government. It was recognized upon its very announcement as a degradation of American government and morals, and nothing but the rise of overshadowing issues has made it tolerable even so long. As stigmatized by Webster, it is a doctrine which "boldly proclaims that political contests are struggles for office and emolument, and that offices are created for the sake of the incumbents, and which stimulates the basest passions to the pursuit of his public trusts."

The Father of American Hotels.

[Bosten correspondence Chicago Journal.] Simeon Boydon, a native of the wester part of Massachusetts, was the father of the hotel system of the United States. His first experiment upon what he called the program plan of hotel keeping was at the City hotel, Brattle street, in Boston. This was the most popular hotel in the country in its time. He sold out to Mr. Doolittle, and then the house was known as Doolittle's City hotel. This hotel used to stand on land adjoining the old Brattle street church and was in its day, he Brattle street church, and was in its day, before the steam railroads came into use, the rendezvous of the stage coach lines that came into Boston from all points. Later came into Boston from all points. Later still it was the home of many of the express companies doing business in various parts of Massachusetts, New Hampshire and Maine, as far east as Portland. When the eity government resolved upon extending Washington street in the direction of the northern depots, it was found necessary to carry the new line directly through a portion of the estate covered by the City hotel, which had been kept as a public house up to within a few years. The next hotel built according to Boyden's ideas was at the corner of Tremont and Beacon streets and it was called the Tremont house, which is still one of the best hotels in the country. In a few years the Tremont house became the wonder of the traveling world, the pride of Boston and the envy of New York. Several New York merchants called on Mr. Astor and asked him to build a hotel in in that city on the plan of the Tremont house. He came to Boston, took notes of the hotel, and on his return to Gotham built the Astor house, and leased the property to Mr. Boyhouse, and leased the property to Mr. Boyden, sr., for the term of ten years. The Astor was built just in the nick of time, when western land speculation was rife and fortunes were made in New York before breakfast. Boyden's clear profits the first year were $30,000. Dwight Boyden retired from the Tremont house with a fortune of $20,000, and his father left New York after selling his lease to Coleman & Stetson, for

TOTAL ABSTINENCE. Meeting of the National Temperance Convention

The National Catholic Total Abstinence Union began its eighth annual convention at Masonic hall at 2 o'clock this afternoon after an address of welcome from Rev. Father Allerding, president. This morning the delegates were escorted to St. John's cathedral by lerding, president. This morning the delegates were escorted to St. John's cathedral by the Knights of Father Matthew and the St. Patrick's society of this city, where pontifical high mass was celebrated by Bishop Chatard, assisted by seven priests. At the conclusion of mass the bishop addressed the delegates. He said that Catholic temperance societies have done and are doing a great amount of good, and as long as they have the church for this guide they will continue to succeed. He read a letter from Pope Leo XIII, in which indulgences were granted those who would comply with certain regulations. A letter was read from Father McColgan, of Baltimore, recommending a temperance society, of which he is president, which has the approval of the Holy Father.

At 2 o'clock this afternoon the societies assembled on Maryland street, between Tennessee and Illinois, and paraded though the principal streets, finishing at Masonic hall. At the conclusion of the parade the session of the convention began. The fellowing was the order of march:

Band: Knights of Father Matthew, Terre Haute;

This evening the ladies of St. Augustine will give a banquet at Washington hall, and the Knights of Father Matthew will hold a ball and reception at Masonic hall.

Frank M. Ryan acted as marshal of the Catholic Augustia Frank M. Kyan acted as marshal of the Catholic temperance parade, assisted by Thos. McGarrihan and Henry J. Boyle. The marching was better than is usual among societies. The Knights of Father Mathew, Terre Haute, commanded by Capt. John Bryan, attracted much attention by their martial bearing. The Knights of this city also show proficiency in dvill.

in drill. Masonic hall, in which the Catholic temperance convention is holding its session, is tastefully decorated. Several appropriate mottoes adorn the walls, among which are: "In God we trust, for our cause is just." "Temperance brings health, wealth and hap-piness—God speed the cause."

The Yellow Pestilence.

The citizens' committee of the fund for the yellow fever sufferers met this morning There is still remaining in the treasury nearly $1,000. No money was sent south to-day. The following communication was received: INDIANAPOLIS, Aug. 27.

H. Bamburger:
Dear Sir—We, the undersigned, offer our services to attend the cases of yellow fever in any part of the south to which we may be assigned by your committee, providing you send us as a body to one place and send medical and other supplies for the sick—the nurses to be under our direction and the modified annulus to be discussed at our order.

sick—the nurses to be under our direction and medical supplies to be dispensed at our order, W. B. FLETCHER, M. D. T. A. WAGER, M. D. FRED SIEVERS, M. D. OTTO E. MUELLER, druggist. CALVIN FLETCHER, student. E. C. THOMAS, student. C. C. HILL, student.

In considering this letter, which does the highest credit to the humanity of its signers, the committee came to the conclusion that they could not accept the offer for several reasons. They thought they had no right to jeopardize the lives of our own citizens, and would in addition be arrogating too much to the meaters in sanding these more to much to themselves in sending these men to the south under their orders. They also considered that the sending of medical sup-plies, etc., from this point would not be feasible.

A Close Shaver.

A Close Shaver.

John Cummins, an L. S. & M. S. engineer at Elkhart, and his wife, are in the city, Mr. Cummins being a delegate to the K. of P. On the road and at home Jack is known as the "close shaver." not on account of the smoothness of his face or shortness of his hair, but for his fast running to get out of the way of trains when he is caught out on the road on their time. Recently with nothing but his engine, he left Goshen for Elkhart, a distance of someten miles having to make a distance of some ten miles, having to make a siding between these places, there to allow a sunng between these places, there to allow a passenger train coming toward him to pass, and having but a short time in which to make the run, shorter than he expected, having been hindered by extra work. As he pulled out of the village a universal howl went up, "Don't go, Jack, you'll get caught sure and be smashed all to the devil." His only answer was to pull the His only answer was to pull the throttle wide open, crowd more steam on, and tell the fireman (a red-headed Irishman) to chuck more fuel in. Faster and faster the engine went, until the telegraph poles soon began to look like a fine tooth comb. To be brief, the siding was reached, and when the passenger soon came thundering by they had passenger soon came thundering by they had clear track, and Jack, with a seraphic smile a clear track, and Jack, with a setaphic smile gently meandering over his classic counte-nance, quietly promenaded home. When the fireman was asked, "Pat, how fast did you run?" he answered, "Faith, an' be jab-bers, my hair stood on ind. We rin as though the divil was arter us, an' the old gal wint at laste a hundred miles an hour." Jack thinks it was about sixty-five miles an hour. it was about sixty-five miles an hour.

An Obliging Thief.

While making his round this morning Captain Fred Ward, one of the postal car-riers found in the letter box, at the corner riers found in the letter box, at the corner of Washington and Delaware streets, a small coral neck charm, with two lockets attached. This was addressed to the chief of police with a request that he would return it to the owner, who lived in a house beyond Fall creek, and thereby oblige the thief. The locket contained hair and one picture, and evidently would be prized for their associations. The package is in possassion of the superintendent of the postoffice.

An attempt to break into the safe at C. C. Foster & Co.'s lumber-yard office, corner of First street and the Lafayette railroad tracks, last night, failed. The safe was badly bruised by the burglars, the combination lock being damaged $50 worth. A suit of clothes hanging in the office belonging to Albert Dillingham, was faken by the thieves. The following prizes were awarded at the There was no money in the safe.
